

He was just a normal person, like you and me. A wonderful husband, a dependable and delightful father, a good neighbor, and a reliable friend. His name is Weibin Wang, a Ph.D. from Columbia University and an employee of Cantor Fitzgerald/eSpeed in the World Trade Center. He left home at 7:15 am on that fateful Tuesday, saying good-bye to his wife and three young children. He has never been heard from since. Like almost 5000 others, Weibin did not return home, he is still listed as missing.

He had a beautiful family, a beautiful life. But all of this has been shattered by the despicable terrorist attack on Tuesday morning, September 11, 2001. When the first plane hit the World Trade Center, he was working on the 103rd floor of the north tower. No one knows what happened to Weibin after that, but everyone now knows that the office he had been working in for the last two years, simply disappeared.

Weibin may never come back, to his loving wife, his beautiful children, his neighbors and his friends. He may never arrange the birthday party, that he promised to his 12 year old son, buy that pretty bike, that he promised to his 10 year old daughter or teach his 2 year old baby to sing a lullaby. He may never be able to tell his grieving wife just how much he loves her. He may never know how desperately we are hoping, waiting and praying for his return home.

Since the WTC tragedy, all of us have provided support to Weibin's family. Friends, neighbors and some who might not have known Weibin personally, have all helped. Some of us have been going through all the hospitals in New York City looking for him, posting pictures, seeking any information that might lead us to find him. As time has passed, as hours have turned into days, his wife, children and all of us are facing an increasingly cruel reality. We might have lost Weibin forever.

As we all know, raising three young children is a great challenge, both physically and financially for any family. It is especially difficult, when the primary income provider has been lost. Weibin's wife now has to do it all alone. They need help. If you want to help Weibin's family, please make your donation to
