

What is the Source of Tropical Marine Foraminifera in the Hudson River?

Dallas Abbott¹ and Bärbel Hönisch²

¹Adj. Res. Scientist-LDEO, Palisades, NY 10964, ²Assistant Professor, Columbia Univ.

Abstract. Tropical marine foraminifera of tropical to subtropical origin are present in modern sediments in Hudson River core CD2-29. This proposal would fund further dating and characterization of CD2-29 and further species analysis, characterization and dating on an upriver core, CD2-19. This is necessary to publish the work and to enable a NSF proposal.